The goal of this renovation was to give clients a visual experience with the photographic works to be displayed. The project consisted of remodeling of an existing 100 year old house into a photographer's studio and Gallery. The existing structure had two existing additions each addition used different materials. All the exterior walls were out of plumb in plan. The consolidation of the building into a unique expression won first place exterior & interior design in 1995 local competition. Dan Watts summed up the project in these words "Ever had a vision... that you could take something awful ... and turn it into something really nice?" See the following pages for the result.

Architecture is not just design but building relationships with our client's fostering the built environment.
